

1. The first step is to identify the components of the system. This includes the main unit, the control panel, and the various sensors and actuators. Each component should be labeled with a unique identifier to facilitate reference throughout the document.

2. The next step is to determine the functional requirements of the system. This involves understanding the specific tasks that the system is designed to perform and the constraints that must be taken into account. These requirements will guide the design and implementation of the system.

3. Once the requirements are established, the next step is to develop a detailed design. This includes creating a block diagram that shows the overall architecture of the system, as well as more detailed circuit diagrams for the individual components. The design should also include a description of the data flow and the control logic that will govern the system's operation.

4. The final step is to implement the system. This involves building the physical components, connecting them according to the design, and testing the system to ensure that it meets the required specifications. Once the system is implemented, it should be monitored and maintained to ensure that it continues to operate correctly over time.
