

Job Opportunities for Foreign Workers in Sweden's Growing Labor Market

Sweden is currently facing major labor shortages, especially in the education and healthcare sectors. As a result, employment has become one of the primary reasons for residence permits during the initial months of 2024. Earlier this year, Sweden's Minister of Labour noted that certain parts of the country are "desperately in need of workers," especially in nearly 40 different occupations, as identified in the 2023 EURES report on labor shortages.

Most Affected Sectors

Healthcare, education, security, and machinery repair and maintenance are some of the sectors most affected by labor shortages. Although these shortages create challenges for Sweden's economy, they also present a good opportunity for international workers seeking employment in the country. Based on a report from the European Labour Authority, some of the most sought-after occupations in Sweden include:

- Bus and tram drivers
- Butchers, fishmongers, and similar food prep roles
- Motor vehicle mechanics and repair technicians
- Security guards
- Home-based personal caregivers
- Police inspectors and detectives
- Medical secretaries and laboratory technicians
- Waste management and water treatment plant operators
- Mechanical engineering technicians
- Psychologists and systems analysts
- Special needs and early childhood educators
- Primary school teachers
- Healthcare professionals
- Dentists, midwives, nurses, and doctors
