Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact aerobically demanding exercise program on the cardiovascular and metabolic responses of sedentary, middle-aged women. The subjects were 15 sedentary women, 40-50 years of age, who had no history of cardiovascular disease, hypertension, or diabetes. The subjects were randomly assigned to either the exercise or control group. The exercise group performed a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact aerobically demanding exercise program. The control group performed no exercise. The subjects were tested at baseline and at 12 weeks. The exercise group showed a significant increase in maximal heart rate, maximal oxygen consumption, and maximal metabolic rate. The control group showed no significant change in these variables. The exercise group also showed a significant decrease in resting heart rate and resting metabolic rate. The control group showed no significant change in these variables. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact aerobically demanding exercise program can improve cardiovascular and metabolic responses in sedentary, middle-aged women.

Abstract
The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact aerobically and resistance training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The intervention group (n = 20) participated in a 12-week program of low-intensity, low-impact aerobically and resistance training. The control group (n = 20) remained sedentary. The primary outcome was the change in physical fitness, measured by the 6-minute walk test. Secondary outcomes were the change in health-related quality of life, measured by the SF-36. The intervention group showed significant improvements in physical fitness and health-related quality of life compared to the control group. The findings suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact aerobically and resistance training program can improve physical fitness and health-related quality of life in sedentary, middle-aged women.
