

Lab 20 – Using Microinformatics to Investigate Evolutionary Relationships: More a BLAST!

Introduction:

Genome-wide (or whole-genome) studies using computational tools to predict function of the Human Genome Project, now also include and require 20,000–25,000 genes that code structural forms. This project also systematically mapped the genomes of other species, including the fruit fly Drosophila and Neurospora. The program and computer programs of the personal data analysis system are available for desktop and laptop computers.

Why is this information important? Along with the identification process function, the sequence of human genes and other genes from different species. In addition, finding other relationships of genes in other species help in understanding evolutionary relationships among organisms. Many of your genes are identical or similar to those found in other species.

Remember your laboratory project that investigated the evolutionary changes in fruit flies. In this case, you have molecular information. Does it follow evolution theory? It should take you time to learn how to use the online human genome to help in understanding the evolutionary changes in fruit flies. This laboratory project provides a comprehensive background material in research.

Microinformatics is a field that combines statistics, mathematical modeling, and computer-aided analysis biological data. Using microinformatics methods, entire genomes can be quickly compared to identify evolutionary relationships and differences. An extremely powerful microinformatics tool is BLAST, which stands for Basic Local Alignment Search Tool. Using BLAST, you can quickly find sequences of interest and compare them to other sequences. Because the identity of similar sequences is a matter of chance.

In this investigation, you will use BLAST to compare relationships and phylogenetic information to construct a cladogram, a diagrammatic representation of evolutionary relationships. Phylogenetic relationships are a cladogram representation of species. Figure 1 below depicts phylogenetic relationships.

Note that the cladogram is similar to a hierarchical or tree structure representing a specific species. The diagram that has species and fossils to which they are evolutionarily related is called a cladogram.
