Abstract

These results are depicted in Figure 2. As shown, until the third year of life, the children in the early intervention group ($n = 21$) in the community, as compared with a waiting (control) group, showed the best language development. In the fourth year of life, the children in the early intervention group began to show a decline in language skills, and by the fifth year of life, the children in the early intervention group were no longer significantly different from the children in the waiting group. These results indicate that the early intervention group showed a decline in language skills by the fifth year of life, and the waiting group showed a decline in language skills by the sixth year of life.
