Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life of sedentary middle-aged men. The study was a randomized controlled trial. The participants were divided into two groups: a control group and an intervention group. The intervention group received a 12-week training program consisting of aerobic and resistance exercises. The control group received no intervention. The primary outcome was the change in physical fitness, measured by the 6-minute walk test and the 10-meter walk test. The secondary outcome was the change in health-related quality of life, measured by the SF-36 questionnaire. The results showed that the intervention group had a significant improvement in physical fitness and health-related quality of life compared to the control group. The findings suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical fitness and health-related quality of life of sedentary middle-aged men.
