Guide to Forestry Joseph Simon Illick, 1925 A Photo Guide to the Patterns of Discoloration and Decay in Living Northern Hardwood Trees Alex L. Shigo, Edwin van Horn Larson, 1969 This guide has been prepared to help you estimate the extent and severity of discoloration and decay in northern hardwood trees Though this certainly is not the last word on the subject our research in this has progressed to the point where our findings combined with the findings of others can be put to practical use By dissecting living trees and studying the organisms that infect them we now know that discoloration and decay develop in certain definite patterns And the patterns of discoloration and decay within the tree can be predicted from external signs Discoloration and decay are the most serious defects of northern hardwood trees In speaking of defect we must distinguish between injury and damage Injury harms the tree damage lowers the quality of the wood For example a disease like vascular wilt may kill the tree but do no damage to the wood But an insect like the cambium miner may do very little harm to the tree yet do great damage to the wood The unseen damage done to a tree is important in the economics of forestry Every operation in growing a tree harvesting it and converting it into products costs time and money And after all the time and money have been spent on a tree the product made from it may prove to be not worth the effort and the tree might have been used more profitably for some other product that does not require high quality wood The increased use of veneer offers an illustration A veneer log brings top prices But its actual value may not become apparent till it is put on a lathe and peeled A log that looks very good and sound to the core may have minute streaks of discoloration scattered all through it so that all the veneer it produces is badly streaked with defects On the other hand a log that has a rotten core surrounded by clear wood may produce the highest quality of veneer So it is not so important how much discoloration and decay a tree has but when these defects are in a tree The pattern of the discoloration and decay that s the important thing

Computer Algebra in Scientific Computing CASC'99 Victor G. Ganzha, Ernst W. Mayr, Evgenii V. Vorozhtsov, 2012-12-06 The development of powerful computer algebra systems has considerably extended the scope of problems of scientific computing which can now be solved successfully with the aid of computers However as the field of applications of computer algebra in scientific computing becomes broader and more complex there is a danger of separation between theory systems and applications For this reason we felt the need to bring together the researchers who now apply the tools of computer algebra for the solution of problems in scientific computing in order to foster new and closer interactions CASC 99 is the second conference devoted to applications of computer algebra in scientific computing The first conference in this sequence CASC 98 was held 20-24 April 1998 in St Petersburg Russia This volume contains revised versions of the papers submitted by the participants and accepted by the program committee after a thorough reviewing process The collection of papers included in the proceedings covers various topics of computer algebra methods algorithms and software applied to scientific computing symbolic numeric analysis and solving differential equations efficient computations with polynomials groups matrices and other related objects special purpose programming environments application to physics mechanics optics and to other areas In particular a significant group of papers deals with applications of computer algebra methods for the solution of current problems in group theory which mostly arise in mathematical physics
