The flapper is located in the discharge line just after the ORV poppet valve. It is a constant 100 psi pressure differential between the fuel pressure at pressure in the valve at all times. The flapper is designed to maintain the 100 psi differential when at or fuel pressure suddenly rises (a picture is shown by the compressor's control of the fuel injectors opening and closing). The flapper contains a spring on the air side of the diaphragm. The spring counters the discharge against the diaphragm's seal when the engine is not running.

After the engine starts, and the fuel and air pressure reach normal operating range, the fuel pressure will compress the spring and the diaphragm will move slightly away from the seat (to a seating position). At this point the pressure on both sides of the transfer diaphragm is equal ($12 \text{ psi spring pressure} + 80 \text{ psi air pressure} = 92 \text{ psi fuel pressure}$).

Any air or fuel pressure "spikes" on one side of the diaphragm will transfer this pressure rise to the other system (air or fuel) on the other side of the diaphragm. Both systems will have a momentary increase in pressure so that the 10 psi difference between air and fuel system pressures can be maintained.

Note: To prevent excessive wear in the seal, the bracket is designed to allow the diaphragm to be slightly away from the seal during normal condition.
