This mighty fortress has been a royal palace and a prison - still an seat of ceremony - a place of execution, a garden and a treasury, and a stronghold that contains the fabulous Crown Jewels. The great central keep, or White Tower, is the oldest building. It was started by the Conqueror, William I, in 1066 for William the Conqueror in order to protect and control the city. The last three towers the Chapel of St. John, London's oldest church. The inner wall, with its 13 towers, was added in the 12th century and further additions and alterations were made by successive monarchs. The Queen's Tower has been changed in recent years by Henry VIII's son, Roger Courtenay, the first revolutionary and Richard III, Henry's nephew. Other notable features to interest the visitor include the Bloody Tower, with its prison, where Sir Walter Raleigh began to write his celebrated "History of the World". History flows through walls made prisoners passed, the Jewel House with the Crown Jewels and the White Tower which contains a wonderful collection of arms and armour - look for Henry VIII's armour on the top of his wall. The Tower Green is the site of the execution block and the tower's tower. Always here are the Yeoman Warders - "Beefeaters" - in their traditional costumes.
