Why I'm Investing in China Dean LeBaron, 2010-02-01 It is more than ironic that the current so called Great Recession has prompted various Western observers to turn a 30 year old belief on its head No longer do the pundits claim that China can only survive and prosper by adopting capitalism now they look to China with its growing economy and increasing demand for consumer goods to keep capitalism itself from collapsing China saw its growth falter in 2009 but it continued to grow nonetheless Its expansion has recently picked up speed even as Western nations continue to struggle Evidence of the wisdom of continuing to invest there can be seen in the strength of its economic vital signs with freight tonnage electricity usage and automobile sales all showing increases International Auditing David O'Regan, 2004-01-27 Stay abreast of the latest information on international auditing with this indispensable resource Obtain practical guidance in such areas as risk assessment logistics and cultural business environment in an international context Examine the risks international companies
