

PREPARING YOUR ARGUMENTS

As a debater, it's important that you make points that are clear, relevant and easy to understand. The use of a verbal illustration or an analogy may help you to clarify complicated terms.

However, you should remember that examples are not proof of a point.

An effective way of constructing your argument is to arrange it with the least important point first to most important point last. People generally remember what has been said last.

In presenting and developing your argument remember to explain what you mean to prove, what the scope and implication will be, and why it is true with facts and evidence (not just assertions) to support your case.

Planning

There are a number of things that you can do in preparation for a debate. Below are some suggestions.

- Keep up with newspapers, magazines and books
- Record material, ideas and keep notes
- Observe and assess other speakers, including public figures
- Evaluate your material
- Talk to other people, ask their opinions

Open a file and keep articles, quotes or humorous cartoons.

Learn to express your thoughts in a more word enriched way - develop word pictures. Use a dictionary or thesaurus to improve your vocabulary.

Your Argument

You will feel a lot happier approaching a debate if your preparation has been thorough. Explore your topic, discuss it with friends, look through books etc. to help support your argument. If you believe in what you are saying you will convince your audience as well. Have the strength of your convictions (sometimes after research we can truly see both sides of the coin!).
