Chapter 2 :

Investment Alternatives: Generic Principles All Investors Must Know.

CHAPTER OVERVIEW

The purpose of Chapter 2 is to provide an overview of the major types of financial assets available to investors and discussed in later chapters. It also outlines the important alternatives of direct and indirect investing, thereby providing the foundation for Chapter 3.

Obviously, these assets cannot be discussed in detail in this chapter; however, instructors can provide additional details as they see fit. What is important here is for students to be exposed to the major types of financial assets early in the course in order for them to understand the basics of alternative investment opportunities. For example, if an instructor were to refer to an example or concept involving a call option or a convertible security, the student may have no idea what is being discussed. A good example is derivatives, a topic of public discussion in 2009 because of the financial crisis.

Chapter 2 first discusses the non-marketable alternatives available to investors, such as savings accounts, because many students have encountered these already. Also, they offer a good contrast to the marketable securities, which are the focus of the text.

Money market securities are discussed briefly, primarily because these assets typically are owned by individual investors in the form of money market mutual funds.

Chapter 2 concentrates on the major capital market assets, bonds and stocks, while providing a very brief coverage of derivative securities.

The idea of indirect investing—the ownership of investment company shares—is introduced in Chapter 2 in Exhibit 2-1. This is because of the important alternative that such ownership provides all investors. They can turn their funds over to a mutual fund or ETF and not have to make investment decisions. It is desirable for students to think about this alternative early in their study. Many investors will opt for a combination of direct and indirect investing, and this alternative needs to be explained early in the course. Chapter 3 is devoted to indirect investing and provides a detailed discussion of investment companies.
