

Hansel and Gretel

Long ago, in a humble hut on the edge of a great forest, there lived a lumberer and wife. Hansel was the older sibling and Gretel was the younger. They lived with their father, a poor but hard-working woodcutter, and his new wife.

The family were not well off. Though they often struggled to get by, things became even worse when a great famine struck the land. With barely enough to feed the entire family of four, they soon became very hungry and their father and stepmother became extremely desperate.

One one evening, as they realized themselves for bed, the woodcutter solemnly asked his wife, "How can we continue like this? What will become of us with so little food to share between us all?"

His wife thought for a while and, when she spoke, the most terrible and wicked idea crept her lips. "There is only one thing for it," she declared. "We must take the children into the woods and leave them there. Without them, we might have just enough food for the lot of us to survive."
