Abstract. Staphylococcus aureus is a Gram-positive bacterium that is a leading cause of hospital-acquired infections. It is also a common cause of skin and soft tissue infections. The bacterium is known for its ability to form biofilms, which are communities of bacteria that are attached to a surface and encased in a protective matrix. This makes S. aureus difficult to treat with antibiotics. In this study, we investigated the effect of a novel antimicrobial peptide on the growth of S. aureus. The peptide was found to inhibit the growth of the bacterium in a dose-dependent manner. Furthermore, the peptide was found to disrupt the biofilm formation of S. aureus. These findings suggest that the peptide may be a promising candidate for the treatment of S. aureus infections.
