Health Literacy Competencies Professionals Delphi:

Health Literacy Competencies For Health Professionals Martine Andrews, 2015-12-08 The purpose of this modified Delphi study was to obtain consensus from health literacy experts on the essential health literacy competencies for health professionals The competencies agreed upon by health literacy experts could serve as a foundation to create and evaluate health literacy curricula for health professionals Reports in the literature indicate that health professionals are ill prepared to mitigate the consequences of limited health literacy for at risk populations Most prelicensing curricula of health professionals do not cover health literacy Agreeing on core competencies is the first step in curriculum design Two rounds of a modified Delphi approach included 20 expert panelists in health literacy that reviewed the potential literacy competencies presented At the end of Round 2 the panelists had rated 105 statements reached consensus on 64 competencies 67% and failed to reach consensus on 41 competencies 43%

Health Literacy Competencies for Registered Nurses: an E-Delphi Study

Coleen E. Toronto, 2016 In the United States only 12% of adults possess proficient health literacy skills Individuals with low health literacy skills experience poorer health outcomes Failure of registered nurses to consider health literacy in communication with patients can significantly affect an individual's ability to understand and therefore follow health advice The Institute of Medicine's IOM Health Literacy A Prescription to End Confusion 2004 landmark report recommends that health professionals be trained to effectively communicate with patients with limited health literacy There is an absence of nurse competencies that explicitly address the needs of patients with low health literacy Therefore the purpose of this study was to identify a set of core health literacy competencies for registered nurses in any work setting A three round e Delphi design was used to elicit essential health literacy competencies for registered nurses with a national group of nurse health literacy experts n 41 Based on partial replication of prior work by Coleman Hudson and Maine 2013 a final list of 50 nursing health literacy core competencies were identified in round two Descriptive statistics were used to analyze data A competency that reached 90% agreement in round two was retained The remaining competencies were then prioritized in round three The final list of prioritized competencies generated in this study can provide a starting point for enhancement of health literacy educational content in practice and schools of nursing

Health literacy and disease prevention, volume II Sudip Bhattacharya,Ozden Gokdemir,Deep Shikha,Ferdinando Petrazzuoli,Poonam Kushwaha,2024-03-06
This Research Topic is a follow on from the Topic Editors successful volume I The term health literacy was coined by Ratzan et al in the 1970s providing the minimal health education required in schools however this term is almost new and in the early phase of development Though many attempts have been made in the past to define health literacy WHO construed it as the cognitive and social skills which determine the motivation and ability of individuals to gain access to understand and use information in ways which promote and maintain good health Health literacy not only focuses on the individual behavior oriented communication but also on the various determinants of health such as environmental social and political factors thus it is ahead in the concept of health education If health education methods go beyond the bounds of information diffusion and bring about interaction participation and critical analysis such kind of approach will lead to improved health literacy personal aid and social benefit by enabling adequate community action and contributions to the advancement of social capital
