the 1980s were 100 and 200, so the decreasing demand, especially the loss of the police supply market, led to a massive surplus. "I never saw a trucker come to my door," says Bousquet. "I had to call all the cops and tell them to come and get one." By 1990, only 100 trucks were in circulation, and the rest of the police force had to be sold. The light towers were sold to companies that used them for road work, the water towers were sold to the water utility, the water pumps were sold to the water utility, the water pumps were sold to the water utility, the water pumps were sold to the water utility.
