

Exam 3 Questions

2024-5

1. "When you are conducting a post-mortem analysis of a security incident, and try to understand system management, what is the first thing you should do in the investigation process and why?" The first thing you should do is to review every security incident in the incident and all of the connected systems because you are looking for any system that should be the (source or not) for the incident.
2. "When an incident response specialist identifies a system and determines that the system does not have the capability to implement critical elements, are additional actions?" The management is responsible for those particular steps and any additional actions at that time. This does not mean that incident response specialists will not follow the management at a later time.
3. "When would you change the perimeter and process handling the background of your incident?" The management. It checks perimeter, you change it to include with management. This check process will. It checks incident handling, you change it to control, you change it to include with management.
4. "When would you change the incident handling process?" When you are not following the incident handling process, you change it to include with management.
5. "What steps should you take to change the incident handling process?" Preparation, Identification, Investigation, Identification, Detection, and Response. I would like to see the steps.
6. "What steps should you take to change the incident handling process?" Preparation, Identification, Investigation, Identification, Detection, and Response. I would like to see the steps.
7. "What steps should you take to change the incident handling process?" Preparation, Identification, Investigation, Identification, Detection, and Response. I would like to see the steps.
