2.1. Research Design

The research design for this study is a qualitative approach, focusing on understanding the experiences and perceptions of participants. The study is exploratory in nature, aiming to identify key themes and issues related to the research topic. The data collection method involves semi-structured interviews, which allow for a degree of flexibility in the questions asked, while still maintaining a focus on the research objectives. The sample size is small, consisting of 10 participants, which is typical for qualitative research. The data analysis is conducted using thematic analysis, which involves identifying and organizing data into themes that represent patterns or meanings within the data.

2.2. Data Collection

Data collection was conducted through semi-structured interviews with 10 participants. The interviews were conducted over a period of 12 weeks, with each interview lasting approximately 45 minutes. The participants were recruited through a purposive sampling method, ensuring that they represented a range of experiences and perspectives related to the research topic.

2.3. Data Analysis

The data analysis was conducted using thematic analysis. This involves identifying and organizing data into themes that represent patterns or meanings within the data. The themes were identified through a process of coding the data, where segments of text were assigned to specific themes based on their content.

2.4. Ethical Approval

The study was given ethical approval by the local research ethics committee. All participants gave informed consent before taking part in the study. The ethical approval was granted on the basis of the study's design, the nature of the data collection, and the measures taken to ensure the confidentiality and anonymity of the participants.

2.5. Limitations

The study has several limitations. The small sample size may limit the generalizability of the findings. The qualitative nature of the data may also limit the ability to make statistical inferences. The study was conducted over a relatively short period of time, which may have limited the depth of the data collected.

Despite these limitations, the study provides valuable insights into the experiences and perceptions of participants. The findings are discussed in detail in the next section.
