

Chapter 11 HEAT EXCHANGERS

Types of Heat Exchangers

11-1C Heat exchangers are classified according to the flow type: parallel flow, counter flow, crossflow, or shell-and-tube. In parallel flow, both hot and cold fluids enter the heat exchanger at the same end and travel in the same direction. In counter flow, the hot and cold fluids enter the heat exchanger at opposite ends and flow in opposite directions. In cross flow, the hot and cold fluids flow across each other in different directions.

11-2C In terms of construction type, heat exchangers are classified as compact, shell and tube and regenerative heat exchangers. Compact heat exchangers are typically designed to obtain large heat transfer surface per unit volume. The major compact ones are compact heat exchangers constructed by stretching closely spaced tubes into an elongated form to make the separating area small. Shell-and-tube heat exchangers consist of large vessels for either pressure or vacuum which are partitioned into sections called bays. Regenerative heat exchangers transfer the alternate passages of the hot and cold fluid in series through the same flow area. In compact heat exchangers, the heat fluids travel in series perpendicular to each other.

11-3C A heat exchanger is classified as being compact if $BS > 700 \text{ m}^2/\text{m}^3$ or $1000 \text{ ft}^2/\text{ft}^3$ where B is the ratio of the heat transfer surface area to the volume, which is called the area density. The area density for double-pipe heat exchangers varies from 10 to 1000 m^2/m^3 . The difference of more than 1000 m^2/m^3 is a compact heat exchanger.

11-4C In counter flow heat exchangers, the hot and the cold fluids move in opposite directions to each other. In parallel flow heat exchangers, the hot and cold fluids move in the same direction. In crossflow heat exchangers, the hot and cold fluids move perpendicular to each other. The reason flow is said to be crossflow when the tubes flow across the shell is that the shell is divided into sections by baffles and the tubes extend the full length of the shell. In shell-and-tube exchangers, the hot and cold fluids travel in series perpendicular to each other.

11-5C In the shell-and-tube exchangers, both the hot and cold fluids are divided into sections by baffles. Fluid in these sections flow either in parallel, heat exchanger and in counterflow sections. However, the baffles divide the flow of fluid, and we only count separating sections as BS for parallel or counter flow. The other sections, but they eliminate cross sections and decrease heat transfer rate.

11-6C Using the tube material as shell and tube heat exchangers increases the heat transfer surface area and therefore the heat transfer increases. But it also increases the manufacturing costs.

11-7C Using a tube plate increases the heat transfer surface area which is an improvement that leads to heat transfer.
