

Game theory often studies interdependent decisions—the outcome for each player depends on the actions of the other.

This chapter has focused on the concerns of realists—the interests of states, distribution of power among states, bargaining between states, and alliances of states. The chapter has treated states as unitary actors, much as one would analyze the interactions of individual people. The actions of state leaders have been treated as concerned with maximizing power through pursuing definable interests through coherent bargaining strategies. But realism is not the only way to frame the major issues of international relations. Chapter 3 reexamines these themes critically, relying less on the core principle of dominance and more on reciprocity and identity.

SUMMARY

- Realism explains international relations in terms of power.
- Realists and idealists differ in their assumptions about human nature, international order, and the potential for peace.
- Power can be conceptualized as influence or as capabilities that can create influence.
- The realist perspective is based on the assumption that states are unitary actors that act in their own self-interest.
- Realists believe that the international system is anarchic, meaning that there is no central authority that can enforce rules or laws.
- Realists believe that states are rational actors that seek to maximize their power and security.
- Realists believe that the international system is a zero-sum game, meaning that one state's gain is another state's loss.
- Realists believe that the international system is a competitive system in which states are constantly vying for power and influence.
- Realists believe that the international system is a system of alliances and rivalries.
- Realists believe that the international system is a system of balance of power.
- Realists believe that the international system is a system of international law.
- Realists believe that the international system is a system of international relations.
- Realists believe that the international system is a system of international politics.
- Realists believe that the international system is a system of international economics.
- Realists believe that the international system is a system of international culture.
- Realists believe that the international system is a system of international society.
