reactivity and regulation in healthy individuals Specifically I predicted that emotion reactivity as measured by negative affect would be negatively related to the volume of the ventral anterior cingulate cortex insula orbitofrontal cortex and amygdala and that emotion regulation as measured by usage of expressive suppression and cognitive reappraisal would be positively related to the volume of the dorsal and ventral anterior cingulate cortex dorsolateral prefrontal cortex hippocampus orbitofrontal cortex cerebellar vermis and anterior insula I tested these predictions using two complementary methods region of interest ROI and voxel based morphometry VBM In Study 1 which used a sample of healthy adult women trait usage of expressive suppression was correlated positively with the volume of the middle frontal gyrus and anterior insula and negatively with ventral anterior cingulate volume Trait usage of cognitive reappraisal was correlated positively with the volume of the bilateral dorsal anterior cingulate cortex All of these correlations were found using both ROI and VBM methods In Study 2 which used a more diverse sample of healthy males and females ranging in age from 10 to 22 self reported levels of trait negative affect was correlated negatively with posterior insula volume although this finding was not confirmed using VBM Both ROI and VBM revealed that trait suppression usage frequency was correlated positively with right ventral anterior cingulate and anterior insula volume The strength of the relationship between suppression and anterior insula volume increased as subject age increased Although no ROIs were found to correlate with trait reappraisal usage frequency VBM found that reappraisal positively correlated with gray matter clusters in the prefrontal cortex The findings from this dissertation demonstrate that the structural alterations seen in individuals suffering from mood and anxiety disorders may not result from psychopathology per se but may instead be on the lower end of the continuum of emotion reactivity emotion regulation and associated brain structure

Social Control and Self-Control Theories of Crime and Deviance L. Edward Wells, 2017-07-05 Control theories have dominated criminological theory and research since the 1969 publication of Hirschi's seminal work on the social bond Social control and self control theorists are unique in suggesting that patterns in criminal behaviors are better explained by variations in social constraints rather than by individual motivational impulses thus indicating that their main concerns are the explication and clarification of the techniques processes and institutions of informal social control The four major sections of this volume focus on the similarities and differences among the major contributors to the early developmental stage of social control theory the central importance of parents peers and schools in the creation of informal control mechanisms and their link to crime and delinquency the theoretical underpinnings of self control theory including empirical tests and criticisms and theoretical integrations of social control and self control theories with various motivational theories of crime and delinquency
