

The Lymphatic System

Lymph and lymph vessels

Lymph is a clear fluid that contains white blood cells and other substances. It is produced in the bone marrow and circulates through the lymphatic system. The lymphatic system is a network of vessels that collect and transport lymph throughout the body. It is responsible for maintaining fluid balance and fighting infection.

Lymph nodes

Lymph nodes are small, bean-shaped structures that are part of the lymphatic system. They are located throughout the body, often in clusters. Lymph nodes filter lymph and trap foreign particles, such as bacteria and viruses. They also contain white blood cells that help fight infection.

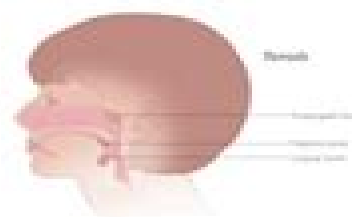

Inflammatory and immune responses

The lymphatic system plays a key role in the body's inflammatory and immune responses. When an infection or injury occurs, the lymphatic system helps to remove the offending agent and transport immune cells to the site of the problem. This process is essential for healing and preventing the spread of disease.

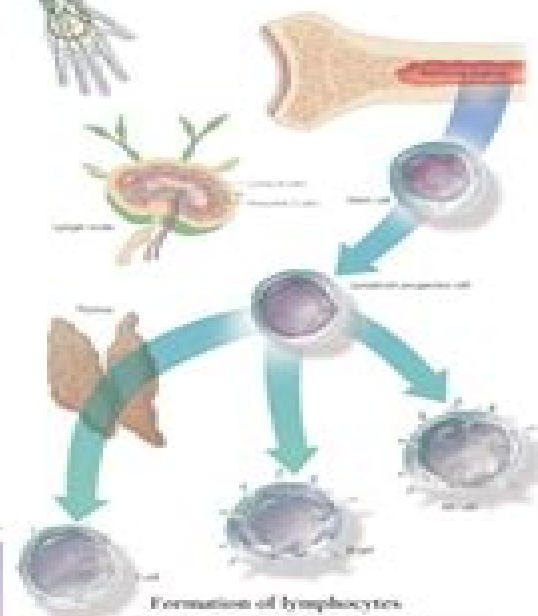

What is the lymphatic system?

The lymphatic system is a network of vessels and organs that collect and transport lymph throughout the body. It is responsible for maintaining fluid balance and fighting infection. The system includes the lymphatic vessels, lymph nodes, and lymphoid organs such as the spleen, thymus, and tonsils.

Lymphoid intestinal tissue

Lymphoid intestinal tissue is located in the lining of the small intestine. It is responsible for producing and transporting lymphocytes, which are white blood cells that help fight infection. This tissue is also involved in the absorption of nutrients and the regulation of the immune system.

Formation of lymphocytes

Lymphocytes are formed from hematopoietic stem cells in the bone marrow. These cells differentiate into B cells, T cells, and natural killer cells. B cells mature in the spleen and thymus, while T cells mature in the thymus. Natural killer cells are found in the bone marrow and spleen. Lymphocytes are essential for the body's immune response.
