

Session 1aID

Opening Ceremony

The Opening Ceremony will include a special welcome from the Vice-President of Île de France Regional Council, addresses by National sponsors, and addresses by the Presidents of the Acoustical Society of America, the European Acoustics Association, and the French Acoustical Society. Musical interludes will be given and two plenary lectures will be presented.

Plenary Lectures

Introduced by George Frisk, Florida Atlantic University, USA

10:30

1aID1. How sound from human activities affects marine mammals. Peter Tyack (Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution, Applied Ocean Physics & Engineering Dept., Woods Hole, MA 02543, USA, ptyack@whoi.edu)

Effects of sound on marine mammals have traditionally been defined either as injury or disruption of behavior. The earliest concern about behavioral disruption was that elevated noise could reduce the range of communication by masking faint signals. Few studies have documented this effect, but recent work emphasizes mechanisms animals use to compensate for elevated noise. Many studies have documented changes in behavior as a function of exposure, but it has proven difficult to relate these to effects on the welfare of individual animals or on the status of populations. Promising approaches to interpreting effects include avoidance of habitat, energetics of foraging, and applying models of anti-predator behavior to human disturbance. During the 1990s acoustic criteria for injury were designated based upon temporary hearing loss. Accumulating evidence of atypical mass strandings of beaked whales coincident with naval sonar exercises suggest that injury or death may result from behavioral responses of some species at lower exposure levels in some settings. A tagged beaked whale showed similar but weaker responses to experimental playback of a mid-frequency sonar sound compared to calls of killer whales, suggesting that anti-predator response may harm animals after exposure to levels of sound very unlikely to cause injury directly.

Introduced by Luigi Maffei, Second University of Naples, Italy

1aID2. New Trends in Aeroacoustics: From acoustic analogies to direct numerical simulations. Daniel Juve (École centrale de Lyon, 36 avenue Guy de Collongue, 69134 Ecully cedex, France, daniel.juve@ec-lyon.fr)

Modern aeroacoustics started in the early 1950's when Lighthill developed his famous acoustic analogy in an attempt to understand, and reduce, the terrifying noise generated by jet aircrafts. For nearly 50 years the subject of aerodynamic sound was dominated by approaches based upon this analogy or variants of it. Recently, the availability of powerful computing facilities combined with the development of numerical algorithms specially designed to simulate sound propagation over large distances has paved the way for "a second golden age of aeroacoustics" (to quote Lighthill himself). In this talk we will first give an overview of this evolution from acoustic analogies to computational aeroacoustics (CAA). Typical illustrations of the CAA approach will then be presented and applications for transportation systems will be discussed.
