

Lab 20 – Using Microinformatics to Investigate Evolutionary Relationships: More a BLAST!

Introduction:

Genome-wide (or whole-genome) studies using computational tools to predict function of the Human Genome Project, now also include and require 20,000–25,000 genes that code structural forms. This project also systematically mapped the genomes of other species, including the fruit fly, mouse and Drosophila, etc. The program and computer programs of the personal data analysis system are available for desktop and server to access and help interpret.

Why is this information important? Along with the identification process function, interpretation of human genes and other genes under different genetic elements. In addition, finding other relationships of genes in other species help in understanding evolutionary relationships among organisms. Many of your genes are identical or similar to those found in other species.

Remember your laboratory project that investigated the evolutionary changes in fruit flies. In this case, what genetic information? Does it relate to other species? It should take you time to learn how to use the human genome project to help in understanding the evolutionary changes in fruit flies. This laboratory project provides a comprehensive background material to help.

Microinformatics is a field that combines statistics, mathematical modeling, and computer-aided analysis biological data. Using microinformatics methods, entire genomes can be quickly compared to identify evolutionary relationships and differences. An extremely powerful microinformatics tool is BLAST, which stands for Basic Local Alignment Search Tool. Using BLAST, you can quickly find sequences of interest and identify genes that are similar to those of similar sequences in a number of databases.

In this investigation, you will use BLAST to compare relationships and phylogenetic information to construct a cladogram, a phylogenetic tree called evolutionary tree. It is an evolutionary tree representing relationships of species. Figure 1 below depicts a typical cladogram.

Note that this cladogram is identical with the phylogenetic tree branch representing a species system. The other two are species and found in each other, the evolutionary tree shows common ancestor.
