

kyoto
day 6

KINKAKU-JI

The Golden Pavilion was one of my favorite spots in Kyoto. The surrounding buildings were said to represent the Pure Land of Buddhist monks and are an excellent display of Muromachi period architecture. Despite all the tourism, it was still a rather peaceful place to be. Afterwards, we headed to we walked through the Nijo Palace and looked at the different well ponds in each room was meant for the different castle visitors and meant to evoke a feeling as they walked. The Moons are also called 'nightingale floors' because they would sing when you walked on them - it's a beautiful technique.

NIJŌ CASTLE

NISHIKI MARKET

This is a narrow food shopping street with an incredible amount of food/tea shops and restaurants. There was plenty of fresh seafood, knives and cookware, and tons of Japanese specialties. I bought a matcha from a wonderful stand. We stopped for nishi and cuttlefish on a street while wandering. Many Japanese also picked from samples. The first shop that opened here was in 1910. It's a small, colorful, friendly place. The place seems to always be bustling with tourists and locals alike. It was very nice to have it and like a dream.

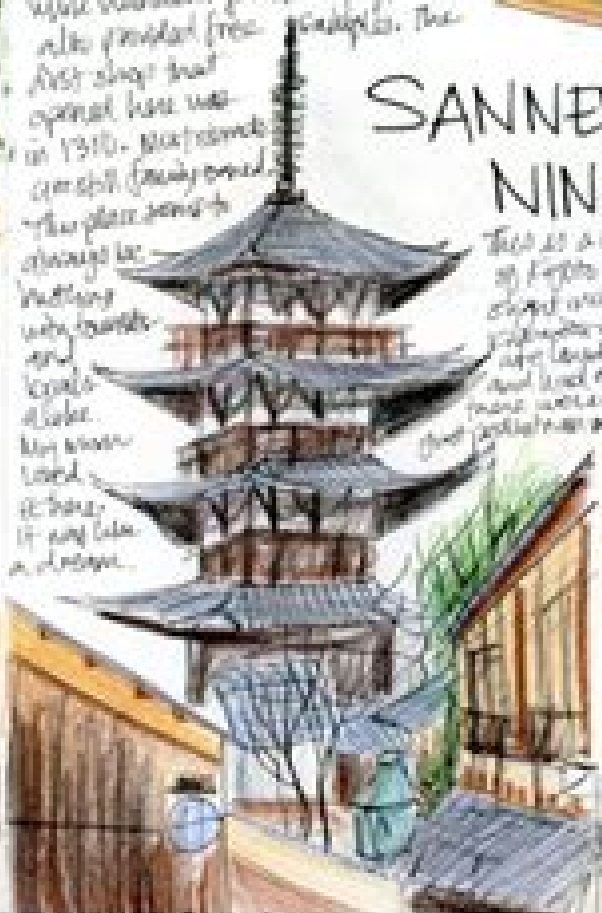

SANNENZAKA and NINENZAKA

This is a very well preserved part of Kyoto. The streets are as original and the landmarks are still there. The street is lined with shops and houses and has a very old world feel - it's just a few minutes away from the modern city.

% ARABICA

We definitely had some really good coffee at this popular Italian-style shop.
