

MOUNTING ON THE JIG

After the holes are drilled, place the ribs on the outer face of each rib locator as you twist the rods through (Fig. 4). When all the ribs and rods are in place lift up rods and ribs and place the ribs against the inner face of the rib locators. With this method you will not splinter or break the ribs while inserting or withdrawing the rods. See that dihedral braces are in place, then fasten rod and rib assembly down with #32 rubber bands as in Fig. 5.

Use a straight-edge over the tops of the ribs to check alignment, also the leading and trailing edge. Now is a good time to see if a rod hole needs reworking. Another way would be to stack the ribs between two rib locators on two rods, then sand uniformly. After all the ribs are fastened down, lay in spars without glue to see that they fit properly without binding, also fit leading and trailing edge. Tip washout can be built into the wing by wedging up the rear rod with balsa wedges.

At this point you will be delighted to see all the ribs being held firmly in proper alignment without a multitude of pins which may or may not hold. Glue in spars, leading and trailing edge while rotating the jig to the most convenient position. The top planking and in most cases part of the bottom planking can now be put on. When the glue is dry, shape leading edge and sand all over. Snap off the rubber bands, withdraw the rods and take off the jig — finish the bottom.
