58. In the TCP example from the Berkeley API section, the message size communicated is fixed regardless of how many characters of actual information a user types. Even if the user wants to send only one character, the programs still sends 256 bytes of messages - clearly an inefficient method. One possible way to allow variable-length messages to be communicated is to indicate the end of a message by a unique character, called the sentinel. The receiver calls `read` for every character (or byte), compares each character with the sentinel value, and terminates after this special value is encountered. Modify the TCP client and server programs to handle variable-length messages using a sentinel value.
