

Madeline Hunter's Lesson Plan

Objectives

Before the lesson is prepared, the teacher should have a clear idea of what the teaching objectives that will be used. What, specifically, should the student be able to do, understand, care about as a result of the teaching?

One way to think about objectives is to consider the audience, what behaviors you would like them to adopt (or skills you would like them to demonstrate), how you will measure whether they have adopted these behaviors, and the degree to which they have adopted them. This is sometimes called the ABCD method.

A. Audience — Who is the audience? What is their background, education level, and skill set? What are their interests? What do they expect to gain from this lesson? Are they more or less homogeneous?

B. Behavior — What the learner will be able to do? What the learner choose to do? What is the product or result of the doing?

The verb used to describe a desirable behavior in an instructional objective must be an action verb that is observable. Here are some examples.

- 1) Given a map of the United States, a student will be able to label the state capitals with 90% accuracy.
- 2) Given a diagram, the student will be able to trace the flow of blood through the heart.
- 3) Given a function, a student will be able to calculate its slope at a given point by differentiating the function, and then evaluating it at this point.
- 4) Given an assortment of EMS equipment to pick from, the paramedic will be able to identify all of the equipment necessary to perform rapid sequence intubation without error.

C. Condition — What are the circumstances under which the objectives must be completed? What will the instructor allow the student to use in order to complete the instruction? To what equipment or tools will the student have access? What will the learner be denied? Here are some examples.

- 1) Given a problem of the following type the student will ...
- 2) Given a list of ...
- 3) Without the aid of a calculator the student will add pairs of improper fractions (numerator and denominator are one or two digit numbers) with non-common denominators.
- 4) Given any reference of the learner's choice ...
- 5) Without the aid of references, the student will name 40 of the 48 presidents of the United States.
