Abstract – The purpose of this study was to determine if there were differences in the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders among different types of workers. Data from the National Longitudinal Study of the Adolescent Health are used to examine the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders among three groups of workers: full-time employees, part-time employees, and self-employed individuals. Results indicate that the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders is higher among full-time employees than among part-time employees or self-employed individuals. This finding suggests that full-time employment may be associated with a higher risk of developing musculoskeletal disorders.
