ARCHITECTURAL STYLE

Shingle

- Well-cropping of decorative shingles, rounded shingles on lower levels
- Asymmetrical facade with irregular, closely pitched roof line
- Shingled walls without interruption at corners
- Interlocking corner gables and multi-level eaves
- Decorative porches

Shingle is an architectural style of the late eight century, characterized by exterior walls covered with wood shingles, and having asymmetrical massing. This style evolved partly from a conscious interest in the shingled Colonial houses of coastal New England, where the greatest concentration of examples are found. Although it is often looked for large, architect-designed houses and hotels, it also was used for smaller suburban dwellings. Most examples were built in the late

Identifying features include:

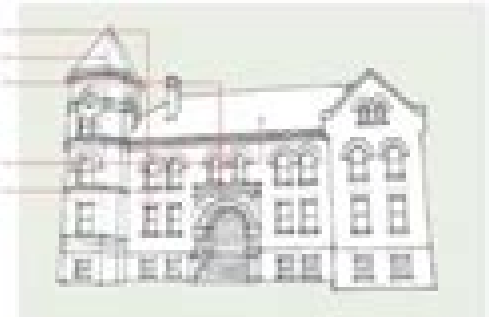

- Well-cropping and roof of decorative shingles (shingled walls may occur on second story only, original wooden shingle now replaced by asphalt shingles on most examples)
- Shingled walls without interruption at corners and corner boards
- Asymmetrical facade with irregular, closely pitched roof line
- Walls with interlocking corner gables and multi-level eaves
- Decorative porches, though these may be small or absent in other examples

ARCHITECTURAL STYLE

Richardson Romanesque

- Round towers, arched windows, porch supports, or arcades
- Towers with conical roofs
- Round towers with steep conical roofs
- Decorative masonry walls
- Asymmetrical facade
- Highly pitched roof
- Large double-hung windows with one wide one tall

Richardsonian Romanesque is a style of masonry building largely based on the Romanesque style of Southern France, in the U.S. The style was championed by Henry Hobson Richardson (1818-1880), an early 19th-century architect. The first of his Richardson Romanesque houses, the rectory for his monumental Trinity Church in Boston, the Romanesque style became very popular for large public buildings during the 1880s, but he only completed only a few more houses in the style before his death. In 1885, a sympathetic monograph on Richardson's life and work was published, which greatly increased interest in the style. Most domestic examples are an outgrowth of this period and were built in the 1880s. Because they were almost of solid masonry construction, Richardson Romanesque houses were much more expensive to build than were those late Victorian styles, which could be executed in wood. For this reason, such buildings are mostly architect-designed landmarks. Scattered examples occur throughout the country, but they are more frequent in the larger cities of the Northeastern states.

Identifying features include:

- Round towers, arched windows, porch supports, or arcades
- Masonry walls, usually with rough-faced squared masonry
- Towers, which are centrally round with conical roofs
- Asymmetrical facade
- Highly pitched roof with arched dormers
- Large double-hung windows with one wide one tall
