

"Beginning to write is an intentional, particular, inner act; usually it seems like turning toward something unknown in my mind - an inward looking, listening. A clearer metaphor might be fishing. I go fishing in my mind. I put out bait, the bait of my own longing, my desire, and my hunger for connection, for a tug of something alive at the end of a line. Something that I may have to struggle with to pull in, but that will be wild and important to me, whether I keep it or let it go. In writing, my desire is for the flash of recognition, the image that I only partly glimpse, but recognize as a glimmer of something worth trying to capture in words on my page."
