

The Lymphatic System

Lymph and lymph vessels

Lymph is a clear, colorless fluid that circulates through the lymphatic system. It is composed of water, electrolytes, and small proteins. Lymph vessels are thin-walled, non-muscular tubes that collect and transport lymph. They are found throughout the body, including in the skin, organs, and bone marrow.

Lymph nodes

Lymph nodes are small, bean-shaped organs that filter lymph and remove any foreign particles, such as bacteria and viruses. They are located throughout the body, often along the lymphatic vessels. Lymph nodes are part of the immune system and play a crucial role in the body's defense against infection.

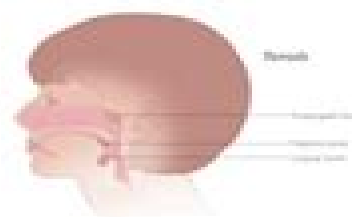

Inflammatory and immune responses

The lymphatic system is involved in both inflammatory and immune responses. Inflammation is a response to injury or infection, characterized by redness, swelling, and pain. The immune response is a response to foreign substances, such as bacteria and viruses. The lymphatic system helps to transport immune cells, such as lymphocytes, to the site of infection or injury.

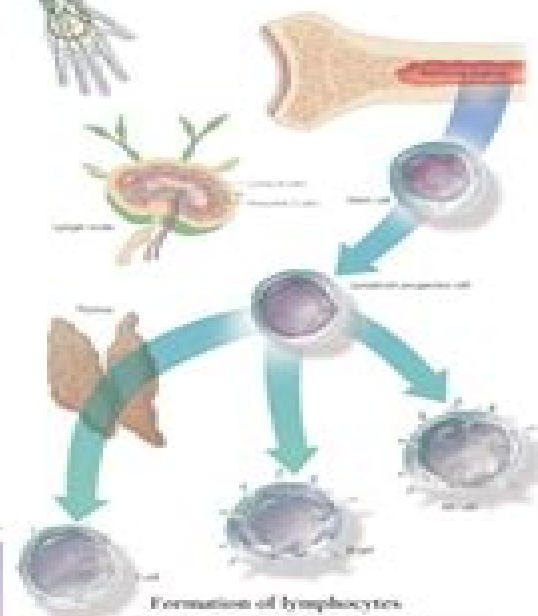

What is the lymphatic system?

The lymphatic system is a network of vessels and organs that help to remove waste and fight infection. It is composed of lymphatic vessels, lymph nodes, and lymphoid organs, such as the spleen and thymus. The lymphatic system is an essential part of the body's defense against disease.

Lymphoid intestinal tissue

Lymphoid intestinal tissue is a type of lymphoid tissue found in the lining of the small intestine. It is composed of lymphocytes and other immune cells. This tissue plays a role in the body's defense against infection and in the regulation of the immune system.

Formation of lymphocytes

Lymphocytes are formed from hematopoietic stem cells in the bone marrow. These cells differentiate into various types of lymphocytes, including B cells, T cells, and natural killer cells. Each type of lymphocyte has a specific function in the immune system.
