The Humans Who Went Extinct, 2009-09-24 Just 28 000 years ago the blink of an eye in geological time the last of Neanderthals died out in their last outpost in caves near Gibraltar Thanks to cartoons and folk accounts we have a distorted view of these other humans for that is what they were We think of them as crude and clumsy and not very bright easily driven to extinction by the lithe smart modern humans that came out of Africa some 100 000 years ago But was it really as simple as that Clive Finlayson reminds us that the Neanderthals were another kind of human and their culture was not so very different from that of our own ancestors In this book he presents a wider view of the events that led to the migration of the moderns into Europe what might have happened during the contact of the two populations and what finally drove the Neanderthals to extinction It is a view that considers climate ecology and migrations of populations as well as culture and interaction His conclusion is that the destiny of the Neanderthals and the Moderns was sealed by ecological factors and contingencies It was a matter of luck that we survived and spread while the Neanderthals dwindled and perished Had the climate not changed in our favour some 50 million years ago things would have been very different There is much current research interest in Neanderthals much of it driven by attempts to map some of their DNA But it s not just a question of studying the DNA The rise and fall of populations is profoundly moulded by the larger scale forces of climate and ecology And it is only by taking this wider view that we can fully understand the course of events that led to our survival and their demise The fact that Neanderthals survived until virtually yesterday makes our relationship with them and their tragedy even more poignant They almost made it after all

Should We Go Extinct? Todd May, 2024-08-06 Should we bring new humans into the world Or would it be better off without us A renowned philosopher and advisor to NBC s The Good Place offers a thoughtful exploration of humanity s future or lack thereof For more than five years Todd May was my philosophical advisor I heartily recommend that he be yours as well It helps that he s quite funny Michael Schur from the Introduction These days it s harder than ever to watch TV scroll social media or even just sit at home looking out of the window without contemplating the question at the heart of philosopher Todd May s Should We Go Extinct Facing climate destruction and the revived specter of nuclear annihilation even as humans continue to cause untold suffering to our fellow creatures on planet Earth we are forced each day to contemplate whether the world would be better off in our absence In this timely fascinating examination May a renowned philosopher and advisor to the acclaimed TV show The Good Place reasons both for and against the continuation of our species trying to help us understand how and whether the positive and negative tallies of the human ledger are comparable and what conclusions we might draw about ourselves and our future from doing so He discusses the value that only humans can bring to the world and to one another as well as the goods like art and music that would be lost were we no longer here On the other side of the ledger he walks us through the suffering we cause to nature and the non human world seeking to understand whether it's possible to justify such suffering against our merits and if not what changes we could make to reduce the harm we cause In this moment of rising pessimism about the future and as many people wonder whether they should bring children into such a dark and difficult world the questions May tackles in Should We Go Extinct are hardly theoretical As he explores the complexities involved with changes such as an end to factory farming curbing scientific testing of animals reducing the human population and seeking to develop empathy with our fellow creatures May sketches a powerful framework for establishing our responsibilities as a species and gives hope that we might one day find universal agreement that the answer to his title question should be No
