

HOW TO READ A FINANCIAL REPORT

period so that financial statement readers can easily identify significant changes.

The Income Statement

On the other hand, the income statement can be thought of more like a motion picture, since it reports on how a company performed during the period(s) presented and shows whether that company's operations have resulted in a profit or loss.

The Statement of Changes in Shareholders' Equity

The statement of changes in shareholders' equity reconciles the activity in the equity section of the balance sheet from period to period. Generally, changes in shareholders' equity result from company profits or losses, dividends and/or stock issuances. (Dividends are payments to shareholders to compensate them for their investment.)

The Statement of Cash Flows

The statement of cash flows reports on the company's cash movements during the period(s) separating them by operating, investing and financing activities.

The Footnotes

The footnotes provide more detailed information about the financial statements.

This booklet will focus on the basic financial statements, described above, and the related footnotes. It will also include some examples of methods that investors can use to analyze the basic financial statements in greater detail. Additionally, to illustrate how these concepts apply to a hypothetical, but realistic business, this booklet will present and analyze the financial statements of a model company.

A MODEL COMPANY CALLED "TYPICAL"

To provide a framework for illustration, a fictional company will be used. It will be a public company (generally, one whose shares are formally registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) and actively traded). A public company will be used because it is required to provide the most extensive amount of information in its annual reports. The requirements and standards for financial reporting are set by both governmental and nongovernmental bodies. (The SEC is the major governmental body with responsibility in this arena. The main nongovernmental bodies that set rules and standards are the Financial Accounting Standards Board (FASB)*, the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants (AICPA) and the exchanges the securities trade on.

This fictional company will represent a typical corporation with the most commonly used accounting and reporting practices. Thus, the model company will be called Typical Manufacturing Company, Inc. (or "Typical," for short).

* The FASB is the primary, authoritative private-sector body that sets financial accounting standards. From time to time, these standards change and new ones are issued. At this writing, the FASB is considering substantial changes to the current accounting rules in the areas of consolidations, segment reporting, derivatives and hedging, and liabilities and equity. Information regarding current, revised or new rules can be obtained by writing or calling the Financial Accounting Standards Board, 401 Merritt 7, P.O. Box 5116, Norwalk, CT 06858-5116, telephone (203) 847-0700.
