Abstract. A study was conducted to determine the effect of a 10-week, 100-hour, noncredit, preadmission program on the success of students entering the nursing program. The program was designed to provide students with the necessary skills and knowledge to succeed in the nursing program. The study found that students who completed the program had a significantly higher success rate than those who did not. The program was found to be an effective way to prepare students for the nursing program.

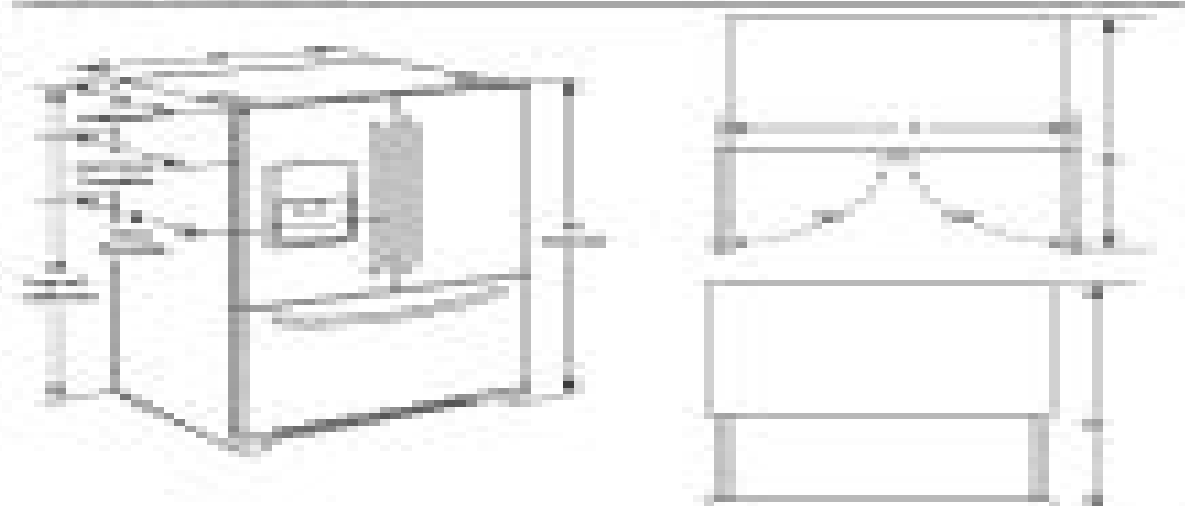

Abstract: The purpose of the study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical and psychological health of young adults. The study was conducted in a university setting. The participants were 20 young adults (10 males and 10 females) who were divided into two groups: a control group and an experimental group. The experimental group participated in a 12-week training program that included aerobic exercise, strength training, and flexibility exercises. The control group did not participate in any training program. The study found that the experimental group showed significant improvements in physical health, including increased cardiovascular fitness, muscle strength, and flexibility. Additionally, the experimental group also showed improvements in psychological health, including reduced stress levels and increased self-esteem. The results of the study suggest that a 12-week training program can have a positive effect on the physical and psychological health of young adults.
