How can technology help protect the public from these homemade devices? This book is a response to a Congressional mandate that focuses on ways to improve public safety by preventing bombings involving smokeless or black powders and apprehending the makers of the explosive devices. It examines technologies used for detection of explosive devices before they explode, including the possible addition of marking agents to the powders and technologies used in criminal investigations for identification of these powders, including the possible addition of taggants to the powders in the context of current technical capabilities. The book offers general conclusions and recommendations about the detection of devices containing smokeless and black powders and the feasibility of identifying makers of the devices from recovered powder or residue. It also makes specific recommendations about marking and tagging technologies. This volume follows the work reported in Containing the Threat from Illegal Bombings (NRC, 1998), which studied similar issues for bombings that utilize high explosives.

The nature, composition, and analytical detection of discharge residue left on a suspect. The role of the ballistics expert at all stages of a case, ranging from the scene of the shooting incident to the post mortem examinations, the examination and testing of exhibits at the laboratory, and the presentation of evidence in court. Recently introduced computer search techniques applied to captured and digitally stored images of marks left on fired bullets and spent cartridge cases. Manual microscopic comparison work and computer-based searches on digital images of bullet and cartridge case marks to determine if a particular weapon has been fired in previous cases.
