Scott]. ,1817 Harold the Dauntless Sir Walter Scott,2015-12-16 Harold the Dauntless is a rhymed romantic narrative poem by Sir Walter Scott The last of his long verse narratives written in 1817 it weaves together elements of popular English legends and folklore using dramatic themes The poem recounts the exploits and the personal spiritual journey of a doubtful knight errant Harold the son of Danish Count Witikind who seeks to recover his lands and wed a suitable spouse Scott described it as a strange rude story It was largely inspired by the Old Norse sagas with which his library was well stocked Cleverly integrated into the plot is the story of how Harold gradually converts from the Norse religion of his ancestors to Christianity The tale of Harold s conversion alludes to the progressive Christianization of England especially during Anglo Saxon times and up to and including the Middle Ages Scott published the poem anonymously in an effort to determine whether criticism of his work was based on its content or on his critics personal opinions of him This caused some confusion some critics recognised his style but considered Harold the Dauntless to be an inferior imitation The Works of Sir Walter Scott: The Lady of the Lake.
