The status of marine fishery stock assessments in the Asian region and the potential for a network of practitioners Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, 2023-12-12

The global fisheries sector in 2023 is now appreciably different compared to that of the 1970s as are the dominant fish stocks that comprise most of the current global landings their location and modes of their exploitation The fisheries of South and Southeast Asia have also changed over this period and alongside their changing nature there has been the continuous evolution of the tools and the requirements for calculating and presenting global sustainability information This has transformed ability to assess fish stocks use data poor methodologies assess multispecies fisheries and also take into account some of the complex interactions between target and non target species and related ecosystem effects The countries of the South and Southeast Asia region have not reported the status of stocks in a comprehensive manner to FAO and there is a need to understand how to access existing information and also build capacity to assess the fisheries of the region using appropriate tools This review provides thematic papers on stock assessment approaches and their application to the region The country analysis describes the data sources and assessment methods currently being applied in national fishery management areas and in smaller regions The review contains recommendations on the needs for capacity building and how improved regional networking can provide support to the greater understanding and application of new or improved methods of stock assessment in the region

How Ought Science Be Taught , Mathematics for the Life Sciences Glenn Ledder, 2013-08-29

Mathematics for the Life Sciences provides present and future biologists with the mathematical concepts and tools needed to understand and use mathematical models and read advanced mathematical biology books It presents mathematics in biological contexts focusing on the central mathematical ideas and providing detailed explanations The author assumes no mathematics background beyond algebra and precalculus Calculus is presented as a one chapter primer that is suitable for readers who have not studied the subject before as well as readers who have taken a calculus course and need a review This primer is followed by a novel chapter on mathematical modeling that begins with discussions of biological data and the basic principles of modeling The remainder of the chapter introduces the reader to topics in mechanistic modeling deriving models from biological assumptions and empirical modeling using data to parameterize and select models The modeling chapter contains a thorough treatment of key ideas and techniques that are often neglected in mathematics books It also provides the reader with a sophisticated viewpoint and the essential background needed to make full use of the remainder of the book which includes two chapters on probability and its applications to inferential statistics and three chapters on discrete and continuous dynamical systems The biological content of the book is self contained and includes many basic biology topics such as the genetic code Mendelian genetics population dynamics predator prey relationships epidemiology and immunology The large number of problem sets include some drill problems along with a large number of case studies The latter are divided into step by step problems and sorted into the appropriate section allowing readers to gradually develop complete investigations from understanding the biological assumptions to a complete analysis
