During the night of 4 January in the dark morning, approximately 2000 people gathered in the square in front of the cathedral to witness the burning of the effigy. The effigy was a large, crudely made figure of a man, dressed in a long, dark robe and a tall, pointed hat. It was carried by a group of men on poles and was burned in a large bonfire. The fire was lit by a group of men and the effigy was burned for several hours. The burning of the effigy was a traditional custom in the city and was held every year on the night of 4 January.
