

Battery Warmer

A battery warmer can be added to raise the temperature of the battery core and facilitate quick starting in cold weather.

Battery Condition

The first procedure when testing a battery is to check for external damage such as a cracked case, loose or corroded terminals, or signs of excessive gassing or overcharging.

A battery must be fully charged before a load test is performed. Test the battery with a hydrometer to determine the level of charge.

On maintenance-free batteries equipped with a built-in hydrometer (eye), the battery condition is interpreted as follows:

700518a

- Green dot visible— Any green appearance should be interpreted as a green dot and means that the battery is at or above a 65% state of charge and is ready for use or testing. This does not automatically mean that the battery is in good condition.
- Dark — green dot not visible (black dot)— This indicates that the battery is below a 65% state of charge and must be charged before testing. A black dot does not mean that the battery is automatically bad.
- Clear or light yellow— This means that the electrolyte level is below the level of the built-in hydrometer, which may have been caused by tipping of the battery, a cracked case, or overcharging. This battery should be replaced.
