Head, Barbara Fister, Margy MacMillan, 2020 This report presents findings about how college students conceptualize the ever changing on line information landscape and navigate volatile and popular platforms that increasingly employ algorithms to shape and filter content Researchers conducted 16 focus groups with 103 undergraduates and interviewed 37 faculty members to collect qualitative data from eight U S colleges and universities from across the country Findings suggest that a majority of students know that popular websites such as Google YouTube Instagram and Facebook use algorithms to collect massive amounts of their personal data but still find sites too useful to abandon Many are indignant about websites that mine their clicks to sell them products but resigned to the powers of an unregulated media environment Some students however used practical strategies to protect their privacy and confuse algorithms learned more often from peers than in classes An abundance of choice for online information left many skeptical and distrustful of news encountered on algorithm driven platforms While some students worried about the creepy way ads

follow them around the internet others were concerned that automated decision making systems reinforce societal inequalities Discussions with students and faculty indicated that understanding and managing the torrent of information flowing through search engines and social media is rarely mentioned in the classroom even in courses emphasizing critical thinking and information literacy A critical review of a decade of research from Project Information Literacy (PIL) about how students conduct course and everyday life research and what that means for educators and librarians provides context to these new findings Four recommendations are provided for educators librarians administrators and journalists working to promote truth and prepare students for a changing and challenged world

Information Literacy Landscapes Annemaree Lloyd, 2010-02-19 Drawing upon the author's ongoing research into information literacy Information Literacy Landscapes explores the nature of the phenomenon from a socio cultural perspective which offers a more holistic approach to understanding information literacy as a catalyst for learning This perspective emphasizes the dynamic relationship between learner and environment in the construction of knowledge The approach underlines the importance of contextuality through which social cultural and embodied factors influence formal and informal learning This book contributes to the understanding of information literacy and its role in formal and informal contexts Explores the shape of information literacy within education and workplace contexts Introduces a holistic definition of information literacy which has been drawn from empirical studies in the workplace Introduces a range of sensitizing concepts for researchers and practitioners

Practising Information Literacy Annemaree Lloyd, Sanna Talja, 2010-06-01 This book showcases new interdisciplinary academic research on the relationship between information literacy and learning It combines findings with new understandings drawn from theoretical and empirical research conducted in primary and secondary schools higher education workplaces and community contexts The studies offer new insights into questions such as how transferable are the information practices and skills learned in one context to other contexts What is the degree to which information competences are generic to what degree are they domain and context specific What are the kinds of challenges and outcomes that emerge from incorporating information literacy into education and training courses And most importantly what kinds of theories and philosophies regarding the nature of learning information and knowledge should information literacies education and research efforts be based on
