Arndt, 2013-01-04 In 1954 the comic book industry instituted the Comics Code a set of self regulatory guidelines imposed to placate public concern over gory and horrific comic book content effectively banning genuine horror comics Because the Code applied only to color comics many artists and writers turned to black and white to circumvent the Code s narrow confines With the 1964 Creepy 1 from Warren Publishing black and white horror comics experienced a revival continuing into the early 21st century an important step in the maturation of the horror genre within the comics field as a whole This generously illustrated work offers a comprehensive history and retrospective of the black and white horror comics that flourished on the newsstands from 1964 to 2004 With a catalog of original magazines complete credits and insightful analysis it highlights an important but overlooked period in the history of comics Catalogue of Title-entries of Books and Other Articles Entered in the Office of the Librarian of

When Television was Young Paul Rutherford, 1990-01-01 A decade after the first Canadian telecasts in September 1952 TV had conquered the country Why was the little screen so enthusiastically welcomed by Canadians Was television in its early years more innovative less commercial and more Canadian than current offerings In this study of what is often called the golden age of television Paul Rutherford has set out to dispel some cherished myths and to resurrect the memory of a noble experiment in the making of Canadian culture He focuses on three key aspects of the story The first is the development of the national service including the critical acclaim won by Radio Canada the struggles of the CBC's English service to provide mass entertainment that could compete with the Hollywood product and the effective challenge of private television to the whole dream of public broadcasting The second deals with the wealth of made in Canada programming available to please and inform viewers even commercials receive close attention Altogether Rutherford argues Canadian programming reflected as well as enhanced the prevailing values and assumptions of the mainstream The final focus is on McLuhan's Question What happens to society when a new medium of communications enters the picture Rutherford's findings cast doubt upon the common presumptions about the awesome power of television Television in Canada Rutherford concludes amounts to a failed revolution It never realized the ambitions of its masters or the fears of its critics Its course was shaped not only by the will of the government the power of commerce and the empire of Hollywood but also by the desires and habits of the viewers
