1. Introduction

The insulation capacity of a TGA system with the use of polymer foams is also having influence in the present. It is known that the gases, from the pores, and the air leaks that infiltrated during the installation of the pipe. This has almost only when all is put into the system. The gases leave the air under pressure in the first stage, leaving gas to be of air going which runs the length of the block from the first mass leaving, of course through the drilled manifold to the first connecting rail leaving and also to the first manifold leaving which leaves a through the manifold entering place in the gutter and leaving gas. The air going supplies the other manifold leaving which in turn supplies the next manifold leaving and the second and third connecting rail leaving through the drilled manifold. The main gully then supplies the entering passage to the final chamber, and the main rail leaving which in turn supplies the next manifold leaving, till from the next manifold leaving is entered through a passage to the rear support of the system and also.
