Tropical Forest Seed Lars H. Schmidt,2007-04-20 The role and perception of forests in tropical areas has changed drastically during the last half century Natural forests as resources for forest products are dwindling Sustainable management of natural forests faces many difficulties in practice although progress has been made However rural people in tropical countries often experience that the forests which were previously the buffer for agriculture and an important resource are becoming more and more inaccessible Remaining forests are to a large extent protected degraded or so far away from settlement that in practice they are beyond reach The majority of the world's forest products in the future will come from managed plantations and cultivated trees The term plantation usually referring to traditional block plantings of industrial species is acquiring a wider meaning which includes for example smaller woodlots shelterbelts and various types of agroforestry Forest seeds are in this context of utmost importance Not only are seeds the most commonly used propagation material they are also the carriers of the genetic material from one generation to the next Forest seed handling is thus an integrated part of selection management development and conservation of forest genetic resources in a larger context With this in mind and considering how self evident the matter of seed quality is in agriculture one can wonder how little attention has been and is given to forest germplasm in many afforestation and plantation programmes most comprehensive review available of the hydrological and physiological functioning of tropical rain forests the environmental impacts of their disturbance and conversion to other land uses and optimum strategies for managing them The book brings together leading specialists in such diverse fields as tropical anthropology and human geography environmental economics climatology and meteorology hydrology geomorphology plant and aquatic ecology forestry and conservation agronomy The editors have supplemented the individual contributions with invaluable overviews of the main sections and provide key pointers for future research Specialists will find authenticated detail in chapters written by experts on a whole range of people water land use issues managers and practitioners will learn more about the implications of ongoing and planned forest conversion while scientists and students will appreciate a unique review of the literature Guidelines for the Management of Tropical Forests: The production of wood Ian Armitage,1998-01-01 Sustainable management of logged tropical forests in the Caribbean to ensure long-term productivity Gräfe, S., Köhl, M., Eckelmann, C.M., Bremner, Q., Oatham, M., Pacheco, R., Playfair, M., Shono, K.,2021-09-01 To facilitate sustainable management of logged forests in the Caribbean forest authorities of Belize Guyana Suriname and Trinidad and Tobago jointly with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the University of Hamburg as a scientific partner implemented the regional project Ensuring Long Term Productivity of Lowland Tropical Forests in the Caribbean financed by the German Federal Ministry of Food and Agriculture The main objective of the project was to support the sustainable management of logged forests to maintain productivity and prevent further degradation For this purpose extensive field studies were conducted in the project countries which resulted in silvicultural recommendations presented in this publication The project findings revealed that the application of general sustainable forest management protocols for tropical production forests that set limits on harvesting does not necessarily ensure sustained productivity if the composition and management of the residual stand are not considered The ratio of the number of harvested trees to the remaining future crop trees can provide a simple indicator of the sustainability of harvest If the current harvest exceeds the number of future crop trees the harvest is not sustainable As a rule of thumb at least one preferably two future crop trees per harvested tree should be retained for future use Protection of future crop trees can be a simple and practical approach to prevent high grading and degradation of the forest growing stock The importance of reduced impact logging to reduce unnecessary damage to the future crop trees and for sustainable forest management in general is stressed Guide to the classical biological control of insect pests in planted and natural forests Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations,2019-05-31 This publication explains the why and how of classical biological control in forestry and addresses the potential risks associated with such programmes Written by a team of experts it provides general theory and practical guidelines featuring 11 case studies of successful implementation efforts worldwide While insect pests already damage millions of hectares of forest worldwide each year the extent of such damage is increasing as the impacts of climate change become more evident and as international trade grows facilitating the pests spread Classical biological control is a well tried cost effective approach to the management of invasive forest pests which involves the importing of natural enemies of non native pests from their countries of origin with the aim of establishing permanent self sustaining populations capable of sustainably reducing pest populations below damaging levels
