Mental Health and Gun Violence Carmen Candelario,Yezet Ramos,2020 The purpose of this paper is to critically analyze Assembly Bill No 1968 which establishes a lifetime ban on gun ownership for those persons who are involuntarily admitted to a facility for a mental health disorder more than once in a year and are considered a danger to themselves or others Due to an apparent increase in gun violence more specifically mass shootings the policy leads us to raise the question Does easy access to firearms for those suffering from serious mental illness equate to elevated levels of gun violence The methodology consisted of a policy analysis using critical race theory CRT and feminist theory in hopes that it would give us a better understanding and increased awareness of how and why gun violence and mental illness intersect with race and gender The results found that standards like the one proposed in AB 1968 are too broad with potential to do harm to large portions of the population while still not addressing the fact that most offenders tend to be young white males We further discuss the need for gun laws and the reality that most of all Americans are in favor of many policies that can reduce gun violence

The Palgrave Handbook of American Mental Health Policy Howard H. Goldman,Richard G. Frank,Joseph P.
