

The concept of learning is an active process that involves participation from the subjective being (learner) and not merely the absorption of information.

Learner participation involves:

- Questioning the information and, if necessary, change or re-interpret it
- Gathering new ideas and info and making it your own
- Relating said information to one's own life and applying it in relevant situations in a meaningful way
- Interacting/discussing with fellow students or the teacher
- Sharing ideas, etc.

Van Schoor et al phased study process:

1. The exploration phase: entails the generalising of activities to find information about the topic. Getting background information to become familiar with the work. Start to plan and manage time, contact fellow students to sort out problems, discussing the topic, identify and clarify difficult concepts, get an overview of the content, make summaries to study later
2. The fixation phase: Getting to grips with the real content and doing intensive reading. Full concentration on detail. Consolidation of facts to fully understand material, summarize facts to capture most important elements, memorise and rehearse to absorb the facts
3. The testing phase: To assess understanding of the material. Asking questions that cover the material studied. May utilize 'action words' (compare, discuss, criticise, explain).

Study Environment

Elements that is helpful to study effectively:

- ❖ Good relationships with those around you
- ❖ Physical space: a particular place, be comfortable, proper lighting and ventilation, temperature control, no interruptions, no distractions

Motivation

Two perspectives:

1. External motivation

Outside influence or consequences

Positive external motivation: if you pass you will get a bursary; if you pass with distinction you will get promoted

Negative external motivation: if you do not pass you will not be allowed to further register / get a bursary

2. Internal motivation

Intrinsic to the individual to achieve personal long or short term goals

Long-term goals: over a time period (months or years) with tools (signposts) to help reach them

Short-term goals: also referred to as objectives (minutes, hours, days)

Learning contract: practically writing down an agreement that help you stick to your program of study placed somewhere that help remind you of your goals and commitments

Internal motivation should be more developed than external motivation. If you are self-motivated with the right attitude and have the necessary confidence you can practically deal with many factors/challenges that the external environment may pose

Healthy diet and lifestyle

Avoid unhealthy substances and refined foods, eat lots of fruit and veggies, eat small regularly, lots of water, get enough sleep and exercise
