

More recently, primatologists and evolutionary psychologists (summarized in Boyd and Silk 2000:596ff.), argue that inbreeding avoidance is evolutionarily old—it characterizes all primate species, including humans. Therefore, it is likely that there is some as yet unspecified biological basis to inbreeding avoidance, expressed in the ethnographic record as an incest taboo. Leavitt (1990) has suggested that biosocial arguments do not present convincing evidence that incest avoidance is directly produced from our biological makeup. A less deterministic view would have it that cultural learning and genetic transmission are not mutually exclusive alternatives and may interact to produce incest avoidance in ways that are complex and flexible (Boyd and Silk 2000:583ff.).

The psychoanalytic argument is grounded directly in Freud's view that humans are innately incestuous because of the psychological processes of family life and the insistence of the sex drive. In psychoanalytic work primarily with women patients, Freud explored puzzling behaviors and symptoms with no known organic cause (for example, severe pain, paralysis, or blindness) involved in what was called "hysteria."⁴ In a paper read to his colleagues in April 1896 (and published that year) Freud announced his discovery that hysteria is the psychological consequence of actual incestuous experience: "At the bottom of every case of hysteria there are one or more occurrences of premature sexual experiences, occurrences which belong to the earliest years of childhood" (1961a:203, quoted in Davies and crenans have their breasts cut open, though they are invisible with X-rays, can all be found in the stories of seduction. [Bonaparte et al. 1954:190–191]

Nine months later Freud had replaced the seduction theory with his Oedipal theory, in which women's reports of paternal and fraternal sexual advances are understood and analyzed as unconscious fantasies generated by similarly unconscious childhood sexual wishes (Davies and Frawley 1994:11ff.). Freud's reversal had long-standing consequences for how psychology viewed patient reports of incestuous sex and for the choices that anthropologists made as to where to focus their studies. Psychology has, for the most part, returned to Freud's initial seduction theory, whereas anthropology has stayed with its long-standing focus on the taboo and on the cross-cultural validity of Oedipal theory.⁵

Problems with Anthropological Theories

Structuralist discussions, in failing to consider the importance of the incest taboo for protecting relationships based on primary attachment and trust, as between parents and children, neglect the psychological consequences of incest. To the extent that incest itself appears in their accounts, it is as an exceptional but institutionalized phenomenon occurring among elite groups in distant times and places, as, for example, in Arens's (1986) and Lévi-Strauss's (1969) excurses on incestuous royal marriages

Imagining Incest Imagining Incest:

Imagining Incest Gale Swiontkowski, 2003 Imagining Incest examines daughter father relations as depicted in the poetry of Anne Sexton Sylvia Plath Adrienne Rich and Sharon Olds Swiontkowski demonstrates a progression in these relations from daughter as victim of the father in Sexton and Plath to daughter as rebel against the father in Rich to daughter as successor to the father in Olds Each poet utilizes the poetic motif of incest in varying degrees to convey this developing relationship and Swiontkowski shows that the struggles and triumphs inherent in this imagined relationship parallel many of the issues raised in the recent social crisis of recovered memories Imagining Incest thus casts light on a painful social issue and extends the hope that comparing these four women poets demonstrates that women who have suffered under the tyranny of a patriarchal system can rebel and overcome by confronting and redefining the incestuous nature of their relations with the fathers of society

Werner Sollors Reader Werner Sollors, 2025-01-31 Born in Silesia raised in the Frankfurt area and educated in Berlin Werner Sollors has spent most of his career at Harvard University in the United States and is regarded in Cornell West's words as one of the finest scholars that we have on race and cultural hybridity in both this country and the world This Reader offers the first comprehensive overview of the work of a central figure in the field of ethnic studies. The pieces collected here range from Puritan New England to contemporary Germany from Exodus to Mary Antin's Promised Land from the Curse of Ham to Teju Cole. They attest to Sollors' deep historical sensibilities, his attention to textual detail and his awareness of the costs and opportunities of both cosmopolitan ideals and particularist commitments whilst addressing a central question: why does modernisation take the form of ethnicisation in many places around the globe? The collected essays are complemented by a detailed introduction by Daniel G. Williams which foregrounds some of the key emphases and tensions in Sollors' writings.
