Working Near Roads

As a landscaping employee, many of your job tasks might require you to work close to roadways. Working near roads comes with significant hazards, such as the risk of getting severely injured—or even killed—by oncoming traffic.

In fact, recent research from the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics found that over half of all roadway work zone fatalities are caused by a worker being struck by a moving vehicle or mobile equipment. With this in mind, it's crucial that you play your part in preventing such incidents by following proper safety precautions. Be sure to follow these rules when working near roads.

Before You Begin

Prior to starting any landscaping tasks near roads, utilize these safety preparation steps:

- Be sure to set up cones and post warning signage throughout the work area to signal your presence to oncoming traffic.
- In the event that any landscaping tasks must be completed on the road, it's important to have someone act as a flagger to safely direct oncoming traffic around the work area. If you are responsible for being a flagger within your work area, make sure you are properly trained and qualified for this role. Depending on the state you are working in, there are specific requirements for being a flagger.
- Confirm that you have all the personal protective equipment (PPE) necessary to perform the task at hand. Further, ensure that you know how to use all PPE correctly.

- Identify potential hazards to watch out for in the work area. This might include:
 - Slippery slopes or steep hills that could cause you to lose control while operating equipment and accidentally move into traffic
 - Work materials, tools or equipment that could become projectiles and strike nearby employees, oncoming vehicles or pedestrians
- Review all company safety policies, protocols and training resources regarding working near roads—including any traffic-control plans. Ask questions if you don't understand something.

While You Work

As you conduct any landscaping tasks near roads, keep these precautions in mind:

- Complete tasks as far as you can from the road's edge. Avoid standing in the road as much as possible. If it's necessary for you to stand in the road during a task, have another worker stand in a safe location nearby where they can detect oncoming traffic and tell you to move if needed.

This collection is organized around three thematic issues that pose significant challenges to the Occupational Safety and Health Administration's ability to protect workers' safety and health. First, the economy has shifted from an industrial base to a white collar service base which includes more women workers than ever before yet many of the safety and health problems that affect women are not being adequately addressed Second free market ideology and globalization have served to undermine worker safety and health laws And finally the effects of 9 11 have exacerbated the trend toward weakening workers rights and safety standards in the name of national security
