fiction The Kidnap Murder Case S. S. Van Dine, 2020-05-22 Philo Vance as you may remember took a solitary trip to Egypt immediately after the termination of the Garden murder case He did not return to New York until the middle of July He was considerably tanned and there was a tired look in his wide set grey eyes I suspected the moment I greeted him on the dock that during his absence he had thrown himself into Egyptological research which was an old passion of his I m fagged out Van he complained good naturedly as we settled ourselves in a taxicab and started uptown to his apartment I need a rest We re not leavin New York this summer you won t mind I hope I ve brought back a couple of boxes of arch ological specimens

See about them tomorrow will you there s a good fellow Even his voice sounded weary His words carried a curious undertone of distraction and the idea flashed through my mind that he had not altogether succeeded in eliminating from his thoughts the romantic memory of a certain young woman he had met during the strange and fateful occurrences in the penthouse of Professor Ephraim Garden My surmise must have been correct for it was that very evening when he was relaxing in his roof garden that Vance remarked to me apropos of nothing that had gone before A man s affections involve a great responsibility The things a man wants most must often be sacrificed because of this exacting responsibility I felt quite certain then that his sudden and prolonged trip to Egypt had not been an unqualified success as far as his personal objective was concerned
