Transcription and Translation

Transcription is the process of copying a segment of DNA into RNA. The DNA double helix is unwound, and one strand is used as a template to synthesize a complementary RNA strand.

Translation is the process of copying a segment of RNA into a protein. The RNA strand is read in groups of three nucleotides, called codons, which specify the amino acids to be added to the growing polypeptide chain.

Transcription and translation are the two main processes of gene expression.
